MYTHS OF A MOUNT

Professor Swensberg Relates the Indian Legends

OF REAUTIFUL MOUNT SHASTA

How the Wonderful Springs Were Formed Under the Pootsteps of the Great Spirit-The Grizzlies' Curse.

[LETTER NUMBER XXXIV.] The Shasla springs are supposed to be outlets of a subterraneau stream, fed by the eternal snows that crown the peaks above, where the Coast mountains of the west join the Sierras of the said. They include the noted Mosstrae Falis and a number of springs, several of which are mineral in character. These remarkable springs or fountains are accounted for Spirit concluded to make the world. He created Mount Shasta first. Using a large, sharp stone as an anger, he bornd a hole in the sky, through which he pushed down snow and see until he had reared the mountain. Then he stepped down from cloud to cloud to the peak, thence to the earth. Stooping, he pressed his finger into the ground here and there, and caused the first trees to start. The sun began to shine, causing the snow to melt and give nourishment to the trees.

Created Animal Life. The Great Spirit gathered some leaves, breathed upon them, and they became birds. He then broke a stick into a number of pieces and from the small pieces he made fishes, from the pieces he made the lesser animais, from the larger pieces he made the grizzly bear and gave him authority to act as master over all the animal creation. The grizzly soon became so large, so powerful and so cunning that the Great Spirit began to fear him, and as a matter of protection made a wig-wam for himself out of Mt. Shasta. The Great Spirit and his family dwelt within, and the smoke curling up from the summit showed the fire that was burning on the hearth. Then a great storm came, the wind blew the ocean against the mountain and made it tremble. The Great Spirit asked his little daughter to go up and quiet the storm, cautioning her not to look out, but to put forth her hand and make a sign before giving the command. The cidlid clambered up to the roof, did as told, and was about to descend when her curiosity gained the best of her, she wanted to see what the world

Fate of the Daughter. She put out her hand, the wind caught her by the hair, dragged her down the mountain side, and left her in the land of the grizzly bear. Near the mountain base dwelt a family of grinalies. The girl grew up and married the eldest son of the old grizzly. The grizzlies then were very different from the grizzlies now-they walked erect like men, carried clubs for weapons and talked. When man

Her conscience smote her, because through all the years she had concealed from the Great Spirit the whereabouts of his child. She called the grizzlies together at the new lodge and sent her eldest grandson towards the clouds to the summit of Mt. Shasts to tell the Great Spirit where his darling might be

The Great Spirits Wrath, When the Great Spirit heard this he was filled with joy and ran down the mountain. So great was his speed the snow was melted, and great streams, began to flow; hidden watercourses were formed, and the fountains and springs along the Sacramento, includ-ing the wouderful "Shasta" spring began to flow, as they continue to this

Get a bottle of Pe-ru-na of your druggist; get two ounces of pure rock candy and add it to the bottle of Pe-ru-na. It should be shook up occasionally until the caudy is all dissolved, when it makes a cough syrup which is simply delicious to the taste, prompt in its re sults and permanently cures. It should be taken according to the directions on the bottle. This cough syrup is not like so many others which simply quiets a cough temporarily, but it cures ratical y. Children like it; it agrees with the weakened stomach, and has no disagreeable effect of any kind. This syrup can be relied on to cure catarrh, acute or chronic, coughs, colds and all chronic diseases of the lungs

Any who prefer to can use the Pern-na without the addition of rock candy, as it is not very disagreeable to the taste without it. Everyone should avail themselves of the holiday gift of the Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing company, who are sending during December and January a tree copy of the llinstrated lile of Life, a treatise on catarrh and winter diseases.
